| Police inspector : Clearly so | mebody in this room                         | Lord Smythe     |
|-------------------------------|---|-----------------|
| who at precisely              | this afternoon was brutally                 | bludgeoned to   |
| with a                        | a blunt                                     |                 |
| I eac                         | h of you to yo                              | our whereabouts |
| at precisely the              | that this dastardly deed                    |                 |
|                               |   |                 |
| Maid : I was                  | the brass in the master                     |                 |
| Butler : I was                | his Lordship's scones below s               | tairs,sir.      |
| Lady Smythe : I was           | my petunias in the pott                     | ing shed.       |
| Police inspector : Constable  | ,   |                 |
| Lady Smythe : But! But        | did you                                     | ?               |
| Police inspector : Madam, as  | s any horticulturist will tell you, one doe | s not           |
|                               | until                                       | is out.         |
| Take                          | away!                                       |                 |
| It's just a matter of         |   |                 |

• Part 2

| The real      | is how observant were you? |
|---------------|----------------------------|
| What happens? |                            |
